

Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez

It should be difficult for any rational person to listen to Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez comments comparing detention centers on the southern border to concentration camps and be willing to give her a pass. Yet, I need to remind myself that this is 2019 and we are living in a time when we have elected officials who have been programmed like computers with all sorts of misinformation and metaphors that they spew daily to create controversy and political divide throughout the country.

My parents told me stories about relatives and friends that were killed in those camps. I spoke to people who have lived their lives with the memories of how close they came to becoming a statistic because they were Jews. There are countless stories of those who went through life, “branded” with an identification number that were permanently marked on their body when they were rounded up and keeps those terrible thoughts front and center day after day.

So am I disgusted with AOC? Absolutely! It is very easy to attack AOC for these terrible remarks. Whether she understands why her comments have created such an uproar remains to be seen. Whether AOC has a full grasp of what the Holocaust was all about is questionable.

AOC is nothing more than a talking head for a master group of people that are determined to change America as we know it. She is the actress playing congresswoman given a new script on a daily basis. Her job is to take these planned controversial topics and disseminate them in a manner that is designed to create a social and political divide, mass hysteria, and a sense of uneasiness in this country. That is the real issue at hand.

Her goal is to create controversy by comparing past events, no matter how horrific, to a current situation and to create a lack of trust for her political opposition, financial and business markets, the judicial system, as well as the social and economic programs that she is trying to undermine. With AOC collateral damage is the price that you pay to move your progressive movement forward. The uses of a false narrative to shake down those that she disagrees with become her modus operandi. AOC understands political correctness and she uses it on a regular basis to make her point and silence those that stand up to her.

AOC's comparison of detention centers to concentration camps have put her in a difficult position. Her refusal to back down and change her tone on this subject is proving to be problematic. Her ignorance and pompous behavior did not take into account the global outrage that she has encountered.

She has refused invitations to visit Auschwitz, which in the long run could help her long-term political ambitions. Her unwillingness to bend shows a total lack of maturity and lack of experience which is needed when taking on these controversial issues.

AOC has been let off the hook on many occasions since taking office. She has been allowed to say things that would have found most politicians, especially Republicans to be immediately sanctioned. AOC district in NY has a large Jewish population. Their actions the next time they go to the polls will tell the American people and the rest of the world where we stand as a nation and if we are willing to allow this "HIT and RUN" politics to continue.

AOC's behavior is supported by many on the left as well as the media. They love the anti-American behavior and comments. A cyber-attack on those feeding AOC her daily briefs would be money well spent.

AOC is nothing more than a "computer application" programmed to spew hatred and controversial information to the American people. Her comments about Auschwitz show us how far she is willing to go. The rock star persona, that she believes she has, gives her the confidence that she needs to continue on with this type of behavior.

Until we as Americans say enough is enough, AOC will continue on this horrific journey.
